

THE AEG INSIDER

Meet Matthew Howe

Matthew Howe is the co-chair of the Governance Committee and is chair of the Southeastern Section. He was introduced to AEG by his colleagues at his first consulting job and finally joined AEG in 2005. After moving to Atlanta in 2006, he decided to reach out to the local Southeastern Section and started attending meetings. Eventually, he was asked to get more involved with the Section by Martha Carr and Carolinas Section members Rick Kolb and Gary Rogers.

Matthew currently works as a geologist and project manager for SAGE Environmental Consulting in Kennesaw, Ga., and holds professional geologist licenses in Georgia and three other southeastern states. He received his bachelor's degree in geology from Wittenberg University, which is located in Springfield, Ohio. After graduating, he subsequently went to work for Law Engineering in the Washington, D.C., area, where he started to gain experience in the environmental and geotechnical engineering industry. His work has taken him throughout the Eastern United States spending most of his time in the Mid-Atlantic and Southeastern regions. Over his career, he has had the opportunity to work on a variety of projects, including asbestos abatement inspection and monitoring, bridge foundation and roadway investigations, groundwater remediation investigations, environmental due diligence and construction inspection.

He lives in the suburbs of Atlanta with his wife Mary Katherine and 2 ½-year-old son Ethan. In his spare time, he runs competitively, having completed in over 50 races that range in distance from 5K to the marathon. He completed his first marathon in 2004 and ran the Boston Marathon in 2005. Some notable achievements prior to his professional career include achieving the Boy Scouts of America Eagle Scout Award and being co-captain of his college cross country team his senior year.
