

It might just save your life.

Many aviation people think that only float flying should involve egress training. They are incorrect. The fact is that any aircraft operating over or near a body of water has the potential to be forced into a “ditch” landing.

Also common is the misperception that the only egress training available involves hands on sessions at a water facility and emersion recovery training. Again – they are mistaken.

Dry Egress Training is a unique, on-line study program designed to help both passengers and pilots learn how to survive in a water-landing emergency. The course was developed by Bryan Webster – who is well known for his wet egress training courses and commentary on the subject in numerous publications. Bryan teamed up with Playsafe Productions – the same production and creative team that brought SmartPilot.ca – Canada’s aviation safety web portal – and SmartBoater.ca – to life.

The online Dry Egress Training Program eliminates the need for a lengthy classroom seminar. It allows the participant to review the learning modules at their own pace and convenience. Accordingly it makes a great supplement to flight school studies, recurrent training of flight groups and corporate/commercial aviation operators – for float or landing gear aircraft.

Both Pilots and Passengers review and learn from information that is relevant to their needs and experience. This is achieved through a series of online video modules – 12 for pilots and 9 for passengers. Participants will learn what to expect when ditching, and what they can do to improve the chances of survival as a pilot and a passenger. Knowledge from others who have actually ditched an aircraft and survived is shared as part of the sessions.

Each video is complimented with an assessment portion that allows the participant to answer questions and review the learning material for each module. After the completion of all learning modules for the chosen course, a certificate is sent to the registered participant's email address.

Registrants have up to two weeks to complete the on-line material. It is totally structured for self-paced study. The cost is $96.00 and the fee is fully applied towards any wet training with Bryan in his full experience wet egress training program.

After taking our course, the chances that you will survive a ditching are vastly improved.

For more information go to the website – www.egresstraining.ca.