

116th CACP Virtual Annual Conference

Policing in a New Decade – Challenges and Changes

August 23-24, 2021

With this conference, we've 'virtually' got you covered!

Canadians have learned to adapt to the restrictions imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic. We've explored and adopted new ways of doing business and the CACP is no exception. That's why we are proud and excited to share our brand new virtual event platform with you. Nothing is better than getting together in person, but this might just be a close second.

A virtual lobby

Your conference experience begins in our life-like cyber lobby. Much like a real hotel or convention centre lobby, this space will provide you with access to the various "rooms" where different conference activities are taking place. From this location, you'll be able to enter the auditorium for plenary sessions, visit the policing trade show, access on-demand materials, consult the conference program, and initiate live chats with your peers.

A virtual auditorium

Settle back in your seat in the virtual auditorium. Here you will be able to see and listen to our conference speakers and view their presentations. A live chat function will also allow you to address questions to the presenters and to share comments with other participants.

A virtual trade show

The CACP's virtual Policing Trade Show offers you the opportunity to learn more effective, efficient, and affordable ways to get the work done.

Enter our computer-generated exhibit hall and visit individual kiosks, just as you would if you were there in person.

Exhibitors will feature their products and services via on-demand videos, downloadable PDF documents, hyperlinks to their corporate website, as well as have full text, voice and video chat exchanges with attendees. A live meeting function is embedded right into our new platform!

A solid professional program dealing with real policing issues

The role of policing is an age-old question with responses that have evolved and changed over time to align with the social, political, economic, and cultural contexts of the moment. This conference will challenge participants to tackle this question once again, in an era that is marked by the COVID-19 pandemic, the demands of policing in a state of emergency, as well as by public protests and demands to reform and/or de-fund the police.

We must define our vision for the future of policing. To do so, police leaders need to employ strategic foresight and consider what policing will be like post-pandemic from a number of angles. Stay tuned to hear more about this year's conference program which will tackle these issues head-on.

Custom-built for the CACP, our new virtual event platform will feature a highly interactive format that will engage, enlighten, and entertain you. You and your leadership and procurement teams will not want to miss out on high-quality professional learning opportunities and registration savings of 40%.
